Airship designed by Sir George Cayley (1774-1857), greatest of all early aeronautical pioneers and discoverer of the basic principle of lift. Lighter than air and heavier than air flight. The design is a true airship, a reversible balloon with engine driven propeller.

This famous design of Dupuy de Lôme (1804-1884), French naval engineer, was experimented with and provided the limited usefulness of airships. It provided only 127 engine hours in service and depended on wind for its way.

Alberto Santos-Dumont (1873-1932), Brazilian rubber planter, who built the first cylindrical balloon with an engine in 1898, and who landed the first rigid airship in 1901, and who won the 1901 Prix de la Liberté in Paris.

Paul Lebaudy (1859-1917), French industrialist who built his rubber plantations in Africa. He was a pioneer of practical airship design, building several airships that included the first military airship which made the trans-Atlantic crossing the English Channel in 1910.

The LZ 121 Graf Zeppelin, the most famous airship ever built, which completed a journey from Europe to Australia long before aeroplanes were capable of doing so, and in 1930 made the first flight around the world.
