The leopard is usually tawny-yellow or buff with black spots arranged in broken rings or rosettes. The leopard is a skillful hunter that primarily dwells in the forests but can also frequent savannas and deserts. In addition to the familiar spotted form, there is a rarer black mutant, popularly known as the black panther.

Figurehead Faith

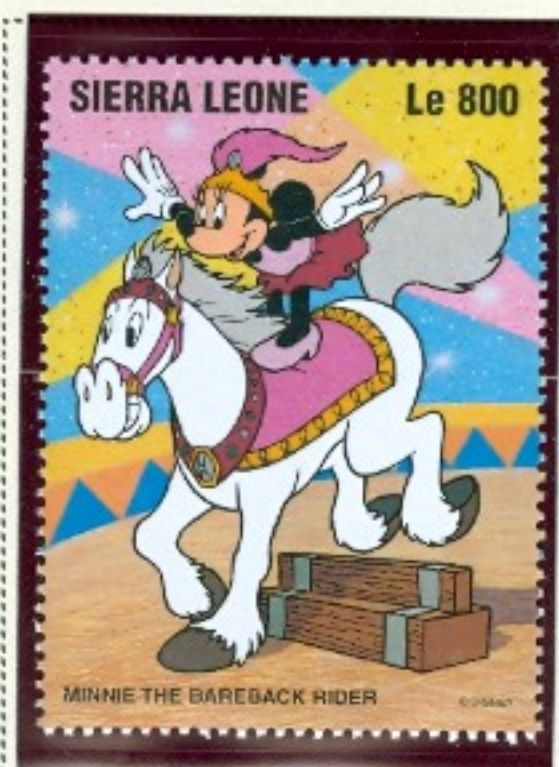

Certain beliefs underlie the use of figureheads on sailing ships - the vision of a ship as a living entity, needing a "head" and eyes to see the way across the ocean; the desire to subdue the gods of sea and weather; bared breasts, believed to calm stormy seas.

Waskos

The Waskos

A Haida Indian hunter saved from starvation two young Waskos, mysterious sea wolves who were great hunters of whales. In gratitude for their deliverance from death, the Waskos brought many whales to the hunter, providing much food for his clan. Eventually the two Waskos were transformed into two huge rocks on the seashore.

Earthly Dragon

In China the earthly lang, or dragon which dwelled in the sea, was regarded as a beneficent spirit of the moist yang principle. This spirit cleared rivers and deepened the seas.
